Vincent regarded Catherine's shoe collection with some concern, since this was something else she would have to give up if she moved below to be with him.

"Why do you need so many?" he asked.

"Just in case," she admitted, well aware that most were useless below.

Vincent had just two pairs of boots and a pair of slippers.

Her shoes in his chamber meant something, though, an informal recognition. How could she convey that?

A tiny, heavy package was delivered to Vincent the next day. He understood the message immediately and smiled as he placed them together.
