

Love Bugs

by Angie

"Everyone need to laugh," Mouse muttered to himself. "Big leaks to fix, Valentine's Day coming. Everyone tired. Not good."

He idly watched an enormous cockroach climb up his chamber wall.

"Arthur!" He pointed at the insect and the raccoon pounced on it and ate it noisily.

Mouse looked in his box of oddments and suddenly had an idea. Over the next two days he was busy bending and glueing. Then on Valentine's Day, early, he placed them on pipes in the home tunnels.

Soon, he could hear sounds of laughter. By lunch time, everyone was smiling.

Much better!

