

Tiny Perfect

by Judith

“They’re air plants,” Catherine answered Vincent’s sceptical look. She showed him the magnetic sheet with two small shells, each containing tiny plants.

“Ah, I see. Of course. Genus Tillandsia from the family Bromeliaceae,” Vincent nodded.

Intrigued, he studied them closely. “I’ve never seen one before.”

Catherine laughed softly. “Why didn’t I guess you would already know their botanic name?” She touched a tiny leaf.

“Water them once a week, and they will be fine.” She studied his growing collection. “I think they can hang out, right here.”

She attached the sheet next the magnet warning to Beware of the Weta.

