Consequences

Catherine explored with tentative steps and bandaged eyes her environment. For her the motive was anxiety, on top of fright and worry.

Vincent arrived at the upper chamber entrance and sensed a return of her strength. He tried to deflect her attention, which did work to some extent this time.

In his absence she unbandaged her head, seizing the first opportunity to face the truth.

Totally unprepared, she froze in terror at the sight of her face, just as Vincent appeared behind her. She brained him with the reflector, reflexively, hurting him, regretting it immediately.

Now both were deeply hurt.
