by Zara Wilder

The Woman He Loves

The night she comes Below, cringing with dread, your son's already confronted sixteen enemies to keep her alive. Thirteen died. Your son killed eleven.

She crushed his heart once, suspecting him of vengeful murders. Twice, romancing some other man. Thrice, courting death against his pleas.

Now she's dragged him into a gang war. He's missing. Wounded, alone. After saving her from a bomb.

And she believes she cares for him more than anything in her life.

With gracious honesty and heroic self-restraint, you reply: "Your relationship with my son is a tragic mistake for both of you."

Truth she ignores.
